(President's Message)

On the day before this year's classes began, I received this note from the father of a freshman: "As we [he and his son] were walking back to the dorm Saturday evening after the gig in the fieldhouse, I remembered so vividly walking across The Loop at night 25 years ago, feeling like I was the luckiest young man alive to be at Whitworth. My relationship to Whitworth began in 1982 in a posture of profound gratitude. And while a lot has changed since then, the spirit of Whitworth that I fell in love with and which contributed so significantly to my own formation has endured."

There isn't a number in this annual report that can measure the spirit of Whitworth. We've assembled a calendar that gives you a glimpse of how we proceed through a year. You'll also find a profile of our solid financial position, and a list of great Whitworth friends who have contributed to our well-being. I think this report captures Whitworth's condition well. We extend deep gratitude to all of you who support this university's mission.

But no annual report can record what a father feels while walking on ground that he loves and claims – ground that he is about to share with his son. Now, in my 15th year at Whitworth, I have watched this campus change pretty dramatically, but I have also witnessed the durability of the Whitworth spirit. I spent part of Labor Day with 10 graduates from the early 2000s. I had to laugh. They haven't lost much of the hilarity or irreverence that I remember them showing as students. But the main reason they gathered was to support each other, to pray for each other, and, as one of them explained, "to build on the relationships we began at Whitworth." I wish I knew how to freeze that spirit. About once a week, I get like Peter, James and John on the Mount of Transfiguration. They experienced something amazing and wanted to build a monument. I do that. Maybe we all do.

Because we can't freeze cultures, we try to codify the components that contribute to the culture. We think about doctrinal statements that everyone must affirm; we consider rules that everyone must obey. And then we realize that a spirit can't be imposed. The Whitworth spirit rises from the university's unity and its diversity, and from the humility with which we hold our opinions and the respect in which we hold one another. The faculty and staff of Whitworth unite at the cross of Christ as, and with, a very diverse group. As Baptists, Mennonites, Presbyterians and Catholics, we stand with the first-century church and with the church of East Africa, with Mary Magdalene and with Mary, the very mother of Christ. Together we proclaim, with the Roman centurion, "Truly, this is the son of God." We have found that proclamation so powerful. so life-changing, and so redemptive that we have made it our only rule of faith and our principal rule of membership in this community. So we don't have a doctrinal statement and we don't have very many rules about how to behave. Rather, we keep asking ourselves what "truly" means and what difference it makes that "this is the son of God."

And out of humility and respect and doubt and faith and curiosity and confidence and the simple confession that Jesus is the son of God, we welcome our students to the spirit of Whitworth University. And through God's grace, that spirit has endured – and will endure – another year.

Whitworth broke ground for a new center for the visual arts that will reflect in bricks and mortar the institution's commitment to the centrality of artistic exploration and expression in a comprehensive liberal-arts education. The $7.1 million, 20,000-square-foot facility is scheduled to open in September 2008.

A n extraordinary $10.6 million in gifts as well as excellent investment returns on assets in the endowment and The Whitworth Foundation contributed to a $15.6 million (13.4 percent) increase in Whitworth's net assets for the fiscal year ended June 30, 2007. Gifts designated for the new tennis bubble, intramural and recreational sports field, visual arts center, endowment and foundation, as well as unrestricted gifts to The Whitworth Fund, make a tremendous difference in the lives of our students. We are very thankful for the 4,900 donors who supported Whitworth during the year.

In addition to new contributions, an impressive 15 percent return on investments pushed Whitworth's endowment up 19.9 percent to $86,801,034 – on track to meet our goal of $100 million by 2010. The Whitworth Foundation's varied assets, which ultimately will support the endowment, earned a combined average of approximately 16 percent and grew to $25,332,804. These assets, while not part of the operating budget, are important for Whitworth's financial future.

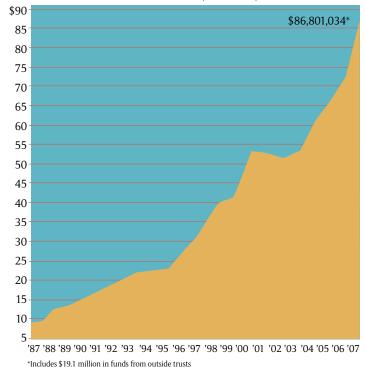

An increase of 600 freshman applications over the previous year, as well as growth in continuing-studies and graduate programs, reflected continued strong demand for a Whitworth education. Another year of record enrollment, with just over 2,500 students, generated steady growth in tuition revenue and in expenses for instruction and auxiliary enterprises such as room and board. Administrative expenses, however, decreased slightly, due to careful management.

A change in accounting principles requires the university to book costs to cover medical insurance premiums for both current and future retirees who were hired before July 1, 1991. Prior accounting rules required cost accruals for current retirees only.

The strong financial position of Whitworth University, documented in this annual report, is possible only because of your generous and steadfast commitment to our mission to honor God, follow Christ and serve humanity. On behalf of our students, we thank you.

• Whitworth's alumni-giving percentage was down last year, even though we had 2,878 alumni donors, compared to 2,562 the year before. As our number of alumni increases by more than 500 each year, gifts of any size from alumni are greatly appreciated.

• In Fiscal Year 2007, 1,026 alumni, parents and friends made their first gifts to Whitworth. This accounts for nearly 20 percent of the total number of households that donated to Whitworth last year. A key component of our continued success in bringing a mind-and-heart education to our current students will be consistent annual gifts in future years from this group of new donors.

- New and continuing donors contributed $1,419,815 to The Whitworth Fund in Fiscal Year 2007.
- More than 47 percent of all Whitworth donors belong to The 1890 Society, a giving club that recognizes faithful donors who give for three or more years consecutively.

The Whitworth Foundation

The Whitworth Foundation was established in 1972 with the purpose of helping individuals establish deferred gifts, such as charitable trusts and gift annuities. These arrangements provide tax savings and lifetime income to donors while ultimately growing the university's endowment. The Whitworth Foundation is grateful to all alumni and friends who have included Whitworth in their estate plans. Your investment makes a difference in the lives of future students.

Thitworth's innovative 4-1-4 academic calendar allows students to study one subject intensively during Jan Term. Many students participate in exchange visits or faculty-led study programs in the U.S., Australia, Germany, India and elsewhere around the globe. Others take advantage of on-campus courses in professors' areas of interest that aren't offered at any other time of the year. The unique Jan Term schedule also allows students to head to the mountains for skiing, snowboarding, hiking and snowshoeing, or simply to catch up on their rest so that they can hit the books hard come spring semester.

Spaun, a physics and math double-major, has conducted research at the NASA Marshall Space Flight Center, Duke University and the University of Colorado during the past three summers. Spaun is also a superb athlete who was named to the Men's 2007 ESPN The Magazine CoSIDA Academic All-America Track & Field/Cross-Country Team after winning Northwest Conference Championships in two events.

66 s I have had the opportunity to share the lives of Central Americans and listen to their stories of the struggles they face daily... I have been challenged to 'think' less and identify more with their lives. At times this has meant feeling a deep lament for every unjust political, social & economic system. I have also had to think more deeply about the ways in which I ignorantly (and otherwise) contribute to the systems of injustice - and what, more specifically, is my subsequent responsibility with this knowledge? Intertwined within the pain and injustice I have seen have been unbreakable chords of beauty - joy within the hearts of so many here who have opened up their lives to this small band of students passing through."

erri York, '07, says she's nothing special among her Whitworth in the Evening colleagues. "Every single person in our cohort has had life happen in some fashion," she says. "My story isn't unique." It is, however, compelling. After taking some time off from school to raise her young family, York discovered that she had multiple sclerosis. Undeterred, she returned to the Whitworth Evening Teacher Certification Program in 2005. Even when her husband was deployed to Germany in 2006 - and she was involved with fund-raising for the M.S. Society and running an M.S. group at her church - she stayed on track. York graduated, magna cum laude, in May 2007.

ew York City artist José Parlá (pictured, right, with Associate Professor of Art Scott Kolbo) is inspired by the accidental beauty of anonymous art he finds in cities around the world. In October 2006, he came to campus for a week-long residency and shared his vision with students and the community. In addition to working with students in the printmaking studio, Parlá created a large work for Whitworth's permanent art collection. Featuring selections as varied as large outdoor sculptures, delicate ceramics and two-dimensional works of all sizes and media, the collection is both a great resource for teaching and a valued addition to campus facilities.

or Rachel Frazier, '04, Whitworth fostered the desire to integrate her personal values with her career choices. Since graduating, she has connected low-income people with affordable healthcare through Americorps*VISTA, volunteered with a welfare-rights group, and, most recently, entered Harvard Law School to become a public-interest attorney. In her Whitworth classes, Frazier learned how Christianity relates to psychology, philosophy and politics; this knowledge now informs her analysis of ideologies and policies. She also learned the thrust and parry of debate - skills that serve her well at Harvard. "While I often disagreed with the majority opinion at Whitworth," Frazier says, "I was encouraged to speak my mind and was challenged to defend my position."

legacy is defined as something handed down from one who came before. That legacy for Marlee (Blick) Huber, '72, and her daughter, Annemarie, '07, is a mind-and-heart education at Whitworth. Graduating 35 years apart – to the day – the Huber women share not only an alma mater, but also the Whitworth experience: their love for the campus, grumbling about Core homework, and the value of good friendships. And, in the true spirit of a legacy, Annemarie and Marlee support Whitworth in their prayers and with their financial gifts. "There is another generation coming behind us, and those kids need an opportunity to be touched with grace and truth in their lives, too," says Marlee.

WHITWORTH

f you know Whitworth, you're familiar with the Core/Worldview Studies Program and with Fenton Duvall. Duvall and his colleague Clarence Simpson changed the Whitworth landscape forever when they developed the idea of a series of courses based on the ways in which religious, philosophical and scientific traditions have sharpened Western thought. Generations of Whitworth students are better able to address those issues thanks to Core. Two of those students (now alums) decided a few years back to honor Duvall with a significant gift to help fund the construction of a new residence hall named for their former history professor. Duvall Hall, dedicated in 2006, stands as a tribute to a man who opened minds and changed lives at Whitworth from 1949 to 1981.

His desire to give stems from his own experiences as an undergraduate, and he says that he is continually renewed when he walks into work. "I feel privileged," he says, "because I am able to see every day the good that money given to Whitworth does." Brody cherishes the relationships he built as a student at Whitworth, and he appreciates the commitment of the school to help him grow in his faith and tackle difficult issues with discernment. "The college years are so critical to the rest of our lives," he says. "I hope Whitworth will always provide opportunities and encouragement for students to develop their faith."
