

Guidance for Research Using Existing Databases

A research project analyzing data from an existing database where the researchers cannot readily ascertain the identity of the subjects does not meet the requirements of research with human subjects if the investigator(s) do not obtain the data through an interaction or interventions with living individuals OR identifiable private information about a person does not involve human subjects and therefore, the project does not have to comply with the protection for human subjects regulations.